Kenmore To Give Program On April 26

Fredericksburg, Va., April 16.—Kenmore, called by leading architects one of the finest examples of Georgian architecture in the United States, will again be the focal point of Garden Week when visitors come to Fredericksburg on April 26 to witness "Kenmore Heritage," the series of dramatic episodes originated by Robert Porterfield of the Barter Theatre, depicting Colonial history that took place in this Virginia shrine.

This historic home of Colonel Fielding Lewis and his wife, Betty, sister of George Washington, has been faithfully preserved by the Kenmore Association as one of the historic show places of the Old Dominion. There are no reproductions in Kenmore's furnishings, none is later than 1796. The exquisite Chippendale furnishings set the atmosphere of grace and leisureliness of the 18th century. In this background is produced "Kenmore Heritage."

Participating in the presentation of the episodes are citizens of Fredericksburg, many of them descendents of Kenmore's original owners. A unique method for handling the crowds viewing the pageant assures a minimum of waiting by Garden Week visitors and adds to the pleasure of the occasion. Young ladies in colonial costume conduct parties of 15 through the mansion on a ribbon, each person's place being designated by a knot.

Cues in the script designate the departure of one party of viewers and the entry of another. In this manner visitors enjoy the entire production in less than an hour, including the visit to the old kitchen, a brick dependency of the mansion, where they partake of tea and gingerbread made from the recipe used by Mary, the mother of Washington, when she entertained the Marquis de Lafayette on his visit to Fredericksburg in 1784.

Fredericksburg claims to be the most historic town in the United States, dating back to 1608 when Capt. John Smith landed here and established a colony. It is the home town of the Washington family. George Washington spoke of it as "The town of my growing infancy."

In Fredericksburg is the home of Mary Washington, mother of the first President. Her grave and tomb is here. Here also is the Rising Sun Tavern, built by Charles Washington, where great men met to make history. Here is the Apothecary Shop of Hugh Mercer, hero of the battle of Princeton who was influenced by George Washington to locate in Fredericksburg; and the office of James Monroe where he began the practice of law. The Monroe Law Office contains the original furniture and silver used when he lived in the White House. Also in the Monroe Law Office is the desk upon which the Monroe Doctrine was penned. Many original Monroe manuscripts are to be found there.

The Masonic Lodge where George Washington was made a Mason on Nov. 4, 1752 and the 200 year-old Bible upon which he took the Masonic oath is in Fredericksburg.

Famous battlefields of the War Between the States are in the Fredericksburg area and include such well-known names as Chancellorsville, Wilderness, Spotsylvania and Fredericksburg.

"Kenmore Heritage" will be presented only during the opening day of Garden Week, April 26. But the lovely old colonial estate will be open to the public during the entire period of Garden Week in Virginia, April 26 through May 3.
